

Israel is a parliamentary democracy with the prime minister as the head of the government. Benjamin Netanyahu, the current prime minister, is elected by the Knesset to serve for a term of four years. Although there is an elected president, the prime minister serves to exercise executive power. There are several different political parties present in Israel which all present views differentiating between religion and politics. The government of Israel tries to maintain being a democracy with basic laws to govern its citizens.

Israel contains various religions that each find the country to be home of their sacred city of Jerusalem. Judaism, Christianity, and Islam are the main religions of Israel, which originated from the teachings of Abraham. The dominant religion of Judaism is present throughout the country; therefore Islam extremists, which find their home in Israel, create commotions between the citizens in Israel. The government of Israel does not completely interfere in the religions, but overall, Israel is open to any religion.

The architecture of Israel is greatly associated with all of the religions present in the country. Jerusalem contains the site of the Western Wall of Temple, the most sacred site for Jewish religious study and the Dome of the Rock, the oldest Islamic monument. These sacred places are built with durable materials, which is important since the sites are holy.

The clothing worn around Israel is similar to the clothing worn in European countries. Israelis wear bold colors and sometimes even outrageous styles, but they also wear simple flip flops or jewelry. Others in Israel are modestly dressed because of their religion, so the styles are inclined to be more conservative.

Education is very significant in Israel, where there are three schools, each for a different level of education. All individuals are required to attend at least ten years of school and then some might go on to the intermediate and secondary schools. Some of the schools are based on religion; therefore the students may only be presented with the studies of religion and not the necessary information needed in the real world. But all in all, schools are valued throughout Israel.

Israel contains a variety of various foods that are popular to several cultures. Different foods are served during holidays, such as potato latkes and cheese blintzes. Lunch is considered the primary meal of the day, where people may lavishly feast on various foods, including cheeses and bread. Many Israelis are conscious of what they eat because they observe a Kosher diet, which does not allow individuals to feast on pork, shellfish, and other non-kosher certified products.

Israel has an advanced and diversified economy which contains several jobs available to the workforce. The country has become a world leader in software development and its technology market and grown to be very developed. Although the economy of Israel is advancing, it has still yet to become a tourist destination. Overall, the jobs that the progressing economy has created will lead to a rise in the number of people in the workforce.

The languages of Israel are exceptionally diversified because of the many religions that are present in the country. The country contains two official languages, Hebrew and Arabic, which are widely spoken throughout the country, whereas English has lost its importance. Arabic is required to be taught throughout the schools of Israel, even in Hebrew-speaking schools. The languages of Israel demonstrate the cultures that have been present throughout the country.

Entertainment is prominent in Israel, especially in the cities of Jerusalem and Tel Aviv. Parties, movies theatres, ballets, and operas are some forms of entertainment that individuals enjoy attending. The youth of Israel enjoy interacting with each other and going to the movies to see the local and international films that are presented. All in all, entertainment is an important part of the daily life of the citizens of Israel.