

On line gambling is a compulsive addiction and it is a problem, addiction, that is fuelled by greed, the need to win and the need to feel important. The on line gambler is somewhat superstitious, believes in obtaining winner after winner. The truth is that on line gambling has its price to pay.

With on line gambling it requires a mental approach in feeling in charge and in control. Where on line gambling makes a false economy for society. Win, and Win again, here I wish good luck to you. Most people who engage in this form of entertainment or wagering, the gambling itself will eventually get these people licked.

On line gambling causes a person to effectively waste money, create bigger financial problems by obtaining debt and the debt increasing. Secondly relationships, marriages, trust are all affected by those that seek to make a profit on sporting and non sporting gambling activity.

The Internet was not created, so that you or I start wagering small, large amounts of money on a daily or weekly basis. The operators of on line gambling websites just want mug punters hard earned cash. The odds, the chances of people winning regularly or even occasionally is slim. I am sure if you or I could pick one winner out of the daily sports newspaper.

It is so easy to obtain enough finance to fund on line gambling, so easy to open up a on line sports book account. The facilities of these sites are so modern, up to date, they are safe and secure websites. The site navigation and graphics and background entice the on line surfer into engaging the thought that this site is cool. It is so easy to place a wager with an on line bookmaker. The processing of the wagering is done almost instantly.

The harsh reality however. Here gambling, once a wager is made this has handed the betting firm a wad of cash, slowly slowly, on line gambling cash is being electronically being transferred from account number 12dsfs (not a real account), to the account of the bookie. Win and that is alright, but if you lose one wager, the temptation is to wager more, try and hope and pray that the next race gets you out of trouble. On a daily level, the truth is that for the majority the losses will not be that great to start with. Though if lose on day 1, and the regrettable habit that on line gambling creates of course, is the need to return to the same site or possibly create a new account elsewhere, and wager again.

At the end of day one, a winner wont even bother making much of an effort with parental, or partner relationships. The gambling problem has them licked. As a loser the temptation is to avoid the truth of letting your mother, father, your wife, or vice versa, know that you have wagered on line and lost x number of currency stakes. This is what happens, the problems get bottled up, pretending that nothing happened. Wrong!

Here on day two the punter in the back of his/her mind is chasing the losses of yesterday. The delusional feeling that everything will be fine today, that my horse can not get beat. These mind games start playing. The end result is more losses, more misery, more self pity, and self doubt. Though again it is not until a person reaches the bottom of their daily on line gambling allowance that people stop for that day. So again the effects of day one continue and the problem is now really serious, not that it was not before.

So back a loser on a continual basis, results in higher and higher overdrafts, credit card bills. What would I say to my wife, if I lost x number of thousands of pounds. If I did tell her, I might never see her again. This is the pain that this problem causes. My wife means more to me than the winning or most likely losing. I have heard stories of people losing property, businesses, and all their assets taken as a result of gambling. The truth and the pain is real.

In conclusion I urge people not to start or even consider entertaining any idea of gambling, especially on line. Too many gambling sites, site adverts on web pages, just do not fall for it. The Internet is sophisticated and a smart form of business advertising, but please do not place any trust in gambling sites, or in main stream book makers.
